Social media platforms let you talk about a candidate's campaign day after day, even hour after hour in real-time. You can share videos, images, and live streams. So, you should definitely make the most of social media platforms like Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, Tiktok and Superfan, etc in your election communications.

However, you need to remember that the social media platform's audience is heavily skewed towards young people, whereas the electorate as a whole has a much older demographic which uses social media far less than the youth. For these voters, traditional printed communication remains a tried and tested method.

The Key advantages of offline communication and printed electoral material in Nigeria.

On the internet, our attention is overloaded by enormous amounts of information on a daily and hourly basis. This, however, does not happen when someone is walking down the road and sees an election poster, is handed a candidate's business card or picks up a flyer and stops to read it.

The electorate can read it straight away, or at their convenient time when they get to the office, home or shop, and that printed message will always be there: it won't be lost among thousands of social media notifications.

Furthermore, holding printed material of a candidate involves the reader's sense of touch, as well as sight, which stimulates more areas of the brain, increasing the likelihood of the message being remembered.

So, while a candidate can pretty much campaign live on social media, printed election material/gifts remain essential. That's why both strategies are needed to support each other and strengthen the candidate's image among potential voters.

Effective election campaigns should include Election campaign material.

To run an effective electoral campaign, you need to convey clear messages and capture the attention of the electorate. There are many printed materials for doing just this. Let's take a look at some of them.
